

The erroneous idea that all religions are just many different paths to God's presence has prompted a vast number of attempts to promote unity by means of ecumenical movements and interfaith dialogue. For the global-faith enthusiast, such unity was considered vital to the harmony and salvation of planet Earth!

To make any statement to deny the multi-faith view that all religions lead to God, such as Jesus Christ is the only way of salvation, was considered the most politically incorrect statement that one could make.

But thank God, this notion is beginning to lose popularity in western society today. The general public has woken up to the false idea that all faiths can be right, because each faith has beliefs that render those of other faiths false!

Even more important, many have come to appreciate the New Testament principle that validation is different from toleration. No genuine Christian could ever say that everyone's choice is the right one, but neither could he deny another human being the freedom to choose!
