

The New Testament gives a very clear picture of what the abode called Hell is like. Jesus refers to it as a place of “outer darkness,” where there will be “weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

I agree this describes complete isolation from every other living soul that ever lived. But however awful something like that would be, it is nothing in comparison with what the Apostle Paul says here:

They will be punished with everlasting destruction and shut out from the presence of the Lord.

(2 Thessalonians 1:9)

According to this portion of Scripture, Hell is total separation and inaccessibility to any intervention or grace from the Lord, and not just for the duration of one single lifetime!
